In 1904, pushing on microscopical after 1880, the German physicist Ernst Ruschka, who had been a student of Heinrich Hertz, discovered the photoelectric effect. This discovery was one of the most important in the history of physics, as it led to the development of quantum mechanics. The photoelectric effect is the emission of electrons from a material when light of a certain frequency strikes it. This phenomenon was not explained by classical physics, but it was explained by the quantum theory of light, which states that light consists of discrete packets of energy called photons. The energy of a photon is proportional to its frequency, and the energy of an electron is proportional to its mass and the square of its velocity. When a photon strikes an electron, it transfers its energy to the electron, and the electron is emitted from the material. This process is called the photoelectric effect.
